BELL BANKSIA LINK

Project description

Bell Banksia Link designed by Cocks Carmichael Architects connects two busy roads that had become heavily congested at the Austin Hospital precinct and Upper Heidelberg Road. The Bell Banksia link required a major cutting to provide a grade separation under Heidelberg Road producing cutting faces of up to 10 metres high. These cutting faces formed the architectural component of the Bell Banksia project.

The Bell Banksia Link won the 1993 RAIA Urban Design Award and the 1993 National Award The Walter Burley Griffin Medal.
